Nelson Nunes

Senior Software Developer

Cape Town, South Africa

I am a multifaceted, passionate & enthusiastic individual who started my programming career because of my hate for computers. At the start of my higher education (and typical of most students), my focus reflected in my results. After failing to secure a secondary "Parental Bursary", I started my employment career. To keep my mind stimulated, I decided to do a short course and, hating computers, I picked C & C++ programming. I fell in love with the art of programming. I see programming as an art form. With the screen my canvas, the code my brushes, I embraced the journey of coding art. After 14 years of a genuinely illustrious career in software development, I fell on hard times and find myself unemployed. I undertake to follow my dreams once again and begin my journey as an entrepreneurial renegade. Entrepreneurship is no walk in the park and one of the unavoidable side effects that goes along with being an entrepreneur, is failure and loss. Many let failure knock them down, and at first I was no different, however, I always keep getting up, learning and growing. "I didn't fail the test, I just found 100 ways to do it wrong" - Benjamin Franklin.
